

NEGROES FIGHT HARD TO MOB WIFE KILLER

Rookie Policeman With Gun
Beats Back Harlem Crowd
Bent on Lynching.

RESERVES CALLED OUT

Black Porter Beats and Slashes
Helpmate to Death in Street.

A mob of more than 1,000 negroes fought last night with Edward Sullivan, a policeman who has been on the force only a month, for possession of Isiah Washington, aged 31, a negro porter employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, who had killed his wife at Seventh avenue and 129th street. Reserves from the West 123d street station rescued the policeman and took Washington to the station, where he was locked up charged with homicide.

Washington and his wife, Minnie, 25, separated four months ago. He had been living at 204 West 141st street and she with a family named Mitchell at 166 West 129th street. He begged her to return to him, but she always refused. Washington met her at 10 o'clock last night at Seventh avenue and 129th street and began his usual pleading. She turned on him,

"Go away, Isiah," she said. "You've told me all that before, but when I come back you always forget it and begin beating me up. I know how it will be, so don't fool with me any more."

She turned to walk away. Washington, witnesses say, drew a dagger from his pocket and struck his wife over the head with it, knocking her to the sidewalk. Then he drew a razor and began cutting her. Seemingly becoming more and more infuriated at her, he dropped his razor and began jumping up and down on his wife, who was dead by that time. The streets began to fill with negro men and women, who screamed and cursed. Washington became frightened and ran down the cellar steps of 166 West 129th street, where his wife was employed.

Policeman Sullivan, who is attached to the Alexander avenue station, in The Bronx, was a block away, on his way to visit friends, when he heard the first shouts of the mob. He ran to where the crowd was thickest, and fought his way through with his gun in his right hand. He caught Washington at the foot of the cellar steps and brought him back to the street, holding the negro's neck with his left hand and waving the crowd back with his right, which held the revolver. The mob refused to believe that Sullivan was a policeman, for he is only 22 years old and has a youthful appearance. They backed him and his prisoner against the wall of the house and began struggling to take Washington away. They might have succeeded if Detective Thomas Donohue and Joseph Brannigan had not come down the avenue in a police automobile. The detectives joined Sullivan, but all three were in danger of losing the prisoner when reserves arrived under Capt. Hubert Callahan. Washington was hustled into a patrol wagon and taken to the station. For two hours a crowd of several thousand milled about the streets near the station, hoping they would get another chance at the negro who had killed his wife.
